What would I be doing? Retail occupations include people who work for a retail business selling goods to customers, including those directly assisting the public in finding what they need to those working behind the scenes maintaining inventory and protecting that inventory, and those supervising operations and workers.

How much money could I be earning? The diversity of responsibilities makes for a range of wages, with entry-level occupations topping out around $12 an hour while occupations that require more experience or training, like supervisors, earning as much as $27 an hour.

Where would I be working? Retail occupations are found in everything from small, local shops to big-box chains and department stores. Expect some nights, weekends and holiday shifts.

Is this a growing field? This field is a huge part of Northwest Indiana's economy and is expected to grow 2% in Northwest Indiana through 2022 with 842 new jobs projected.

What skills should I have? To work in this field, it's important to be able to work with the public and have excellent communication skills. Those who enjoy being helpful will do well, and those with a talent for sales, inventory management or working in a team environment can become valuable employees who will often be promoted to greater responsibility.

What education or training do I need? Entry-level occupations seek those with a high school diploma, with additional training valued by employers who need workers interested in developing a career. WorkOne can help with training and scholarships so you can achieve your goal.
